

Contents

List of Figures — IX

List of Infographics — XIII

- 1 Connecting semiotics and cultural geography: A new approach to the study of monuments and memorials — 1
 - Historical epistemology and the construction of the past — 3
 - Monuments and the construction of the past in Estonia — 4
 - Estonia in figures — 6
 - Outline of the book — 8
 - Acknowledgements — 10

Part A: A Semiotic and geographical approach to monuments in transitional societies

- 2 Toward a semiotic and geographical approach to monuments — 13
 - 2.1 The limitations of previous research on monuments — 13
 - 2.2 Connecting semiotics and cultural geography: A holistic perspective on the meaning-making of monuments — 26
- 3 The multiple meanings of monuments in transitional societies: The case of Estonia — 33
 - 3.1 The two-tiered national discourse in post-Soviet countries — 34
 - 3.2 Estonia from the pre-Soviet times to today's democracy in the European Union — 35
 - 3.3 The War of Monuments in Estonia — 40
 - 3.4 Notes on methodology — 42
- 4 The cultural reinvention of monuments and memorials — 45
 - 4.1 Leaving the monument as it stands — 45
 - 4.2 Conservation and renovation — 47
 - 4.3 Manipulation of the surroundings — 49
 - 4.4 Adding or removing elements to change the original meaning — 49
 - 4.5 Turning the monument into something else — 50

- 4.6 Relocation — 50
- 4.7 Removal — 51
- 4.8 Erecting new monuments and memorials — 53

Part B: The cultural reinvention of monuments in Estonia

- 5 Removing and relocating the Bronze Soldier of Tallinn as a translation strategy — 59
 - 5.1 The context of the relocation — 62
 - 5.2 Marginalisation, removal and relocation — 64
 - 5.3 The conflict over the relocation: An ethnic clash? — 68
 - 5.4 Relocation as a translation strategy — 72
 - 5.5 Summary: Relocation as a politically charged cultural reinvention — 75
- 6 Erecting new politically-charged memorials: The War of Independence Victory Column — 78
 - 6.1 The Victory Column according to its designers — 79
 - 6.2 The interpretations, actions and interactions of the users — 96
 - 6.3 The interpretation of the Victory Column between designers and users — 99
 - 6.4 Insights from fieldwork: Three gaps of the Victory Column — 107
 - 6.5 Summary: The multiple meanings of the Victory Column — 110
- 7 The coexistence of old and new: The memorial landscape of Maarjamäe — 112
 - 7.1 The Maarjamäe Soviet memorial — 114
 - 7.2 Estonia's Victims of Communism 1940–1991 memorial — 120
 - 7.3 The coexistence of different landscape memorials — 130
 - 7.4 Summary: The coexistence of memorials at Maarjamäe — 134
- 8 Erecting new urban decorations: The Kissing Students of Tartu — 137
 - 8.1 The Kissing Students according to its designers — 138
 - 8.2 The interpretations, actions and interactions of the users — 148
 - 8.3 The interpretation of the Kissing Students between designers and users — 151
 - 8.4 Insights from fieldwork: Three connections of the Kissing Students — 157

8.5	Summary: Users that conform to the designers' intentions —	162
-----	--	-----

Conclusions: Towards a semiotics of post-Soviet monuments —	165
--	------------

List of references —	173
-----------------------------	------------

Index —	187
----------------	------------