

Contents

Foreword	11
Acknowledgement	13
Note on the text	17
I. Introduction	19
“The approaching person must feel fear. Blockade equals fear.” . .	19
Places of memory	24
Official Siege remembrance	26
... to show Leningraders exactly as they were	26
Pride and restoration – “as Leningraders would” (1944–1949) . . .	30
The Leningrad Affair and its aftermath (1949–1959)	34
Remembrance revisited	36
Useful memories	37
State of research	38
Historiography of trauma	42
Eyewitness accounts	43
Own research and structure	46
II. Trauma	49
“I was scarred for life.”	49
The Siege seen through the eyes of children	51
Assessing the scale	54
“Every damage we suffered”	54
Unaccounted void	57
Psychosis of emaciation and blockade hypertension	59
Two post-Soviet views on trauma and the Siege	68
A study on child survivors of the Siege of Leningrad	68
“I never thought about this.”	71

Signs of trauma in survivor interviews	77
“I cannot say any more.”	77
The attachment to space	82
Strategies of avoidance	86
Conclusion	90
III. Nostalgia	93
“I miss the blockade.”	93
Role models in film and literature	97
Freedom and limitations	97
“Nothing is forgotten, and nobody is forgotten”	100
Flocking together	106
Tales and memories of active participation	108
“Medallists” and “inhabitants”	112
Scripts of public remembrance	120
Ghosts of the past	127
“I did it all wrong, didn’t I?”	127
A destroyed diary	129
Conclusion	131
IV. Patriotism	133
“We educate patriots.”	133
Heroic deeds in the name of the Fatherland	135
The origins of “Soviet Patriotism” and the teaching of history	135
“Young patriots” of Leningrad	139
The Siege of Leningrad in Soviet textbooks	142
“Emotional blindness” versus political calculation	142
Mistakes in the textbook for history	147
“Lessons of courage”	151
Taking one’s own point of view	156
The renaissance of patriotic education	159
“I remember. I take pride.”	163
“Watch out – courage!”	169
Generation gap	173
Conclusion	176
V. Heroism	179
“To tell the truth [...] about the heroic defence of Leningrad...”	179
The Siege declassified	182
Taking “different views”	182

The collection of survivors' memories	185
Adding a message	188
Sore points	193
The military role of Leningrad in WWII	193
Heroes or victims	203
"True and authentic facts"	207
Guardians of "truth"	210
Storing the relics	210
The iron armour	216
Conclusion	219
VI. Attempt at an epilogue and outlook	221
"It was difficult to return 'to the blockade.'"	221
Missing links	223
Photographs and diaries	223
"Throwing" and "nodding"	227
Building bridges	233
The wet bed linen	233
Ghosts	236
Places for contemplation	242
Conclusion	243
Bibliography	245
List of Illustrations	281