

Contents

1	Introduction	9
2	Post-9/11 Britain and Neoliberalism	19
2.1	Representations of British Asians and the State of Postcolonial Studies after 9/11	19
2.2	Neoliberalism as a Hegemonic Discourse	30
2.3	Governmentality and the Entrepreneurial Self	40
3	Novels of Transformation and Categories of Analysis	47
3.1	Literary Fiction as a Discourse of Subjectification	47
3.2	Novels of Trans/Formation	57
3.3	Analytical Approach	66
3.4	The Concept of 'Agency'	71
4	The Ice skater: Monica Ali's Brick Lane (2002)	83
4.1	Emancipation as Formation	85
4.2	Bangladesh in London, London in Bangladesh	94
4.3	Empowered to Have a Hobby	104
5	The Flâneur: Nirpal Singh Dhaliwal's Tourism (2006)	111
5.1	From Mocking Multiculturalism to Colliding with Class	111
5.2	A Flâneur's Floating through Spaces of Class	121
5.3	Picaresque Self-optimisation against Political Impotence	127
6	The Reformed Rudeboy: Gautam Malkani's Londonstani (2006)	137
6.1	Wannabe Rudeboy Turns Good Man	138
6.2	A Rudeboy's Identity Playgrounds	146
6.3	From Unethical to Ethical Enterprising Self	154
7	The Springsteen Fan: Sarfraz Manzoor's Greetings from Bury Park. Race, Religion and Rock 'n' Roll (2007)	162
7.1	The Formation of a Fan	163
7.2	Memories between Bury Park and Asbury Park	169
7.3	Rebel Without a Voice	176
8	Conclusion	184
	Bibliography	189