

struggling to define a nation

american music and the twentieth century

charles hiroshi garrett

Struggling to Define a Nation

ROTH FAMILY FOUNDATION

Music in America Imprint

Michael P. Roth
and Sukey Garcetti have endowed this imprint to honor the memory of their parents,
Julia and Harry Roth,
whose deep love of music
they wish to share with others.

Struggling to Define a Nation

American Music and the Twentieth Century

CHARLES HIROSHI GARRETT

University of California Press

BERKELEY LOS ANGELES LONDON

University of California Press, one of the most distinguished university presses in the United States, enriches lives around the world by advancing scholarship in the humanities, social sciences, and natural sciences. Its activities are supported by the UC Press Foundation and by philanthropic contributions from individuals and institutions. For more information, visit www.ucpress.edu.

An earlier version of chapter 4 was originally published as “Chinatown, Whose Chinatown? Defining America’s Borders with Musical Orientalism,” in Journal of the American Musicological Society 57, no. 1 (Spring 2004): 119–73.

“Ragtime Dance No. 1,” “Ragtime Dance No. 2,” “Ragtime Dance No. 4” by Charles Ives, edited by James Sinclair, © 1979 by Peer International Corporation. Copyright renewed. International copyright secured. Used by permission. All rights reserved.

University of California Press
Berkeley and Los Angeles, California

University of California Press, Ltd.
London, England

© 2008 by The Regents of the University of California

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

Garrett, Charles Hiroshi, 1966–
Struggling to define a nation : American music and the twentieth century / Charles Hiroshi Garrett.
p. cm.
Includes bibliographical references and index.
ISBN: 978-0-520-25486-2 (cloth : alk. paper)—
ISBN: 978-0-520-25487-9 (pbk. : alk. paper)
1. Music—United States—20th century—History and criticism.
2. Nationalism in music. I. Title.

ML200.5.G37 2008
780.973'0904—dc22
2008014157

Manufactured in the United States of America

17 16 15 14 13 12 11 10 09 08
10 9 8 7 6 5 4 3 2 1

This book is printed on Natures Book, which contains 50% post-consumer waste and meets the minimum requirements of ANSI/NISO Z39.48-1992 (R 1997) (Permanence of Paper).

To my grandparents and their American journeys

What is opposed brings together; the finest harmony is composed of things at variance, and everything comes to be in accordance with strife.

HERACLITUS

Contents

List of Illustrations	ix
Acknowledgments	xi
Introduction	1
1. Charles Ives's Four Ragtime Dances and "True American Music"	17
2. Jelly Roll Morton and the Spanish Tinge	48
3. Louis Armstrong and the Great Migration	83
4. Chinatown, Whose Chinatown? Defining America's Borders with Musical Orientalism	121
5. Sounds of Paradise: Hawai'i and the American Musical Imagination	165
Conclusion: American Music at the Turn of a New Century	215
Notes	223
Bibliography	259
Index	277

Illustrations

FIGURES

1. Cover art for Ferd Morton's "'Jelly Roll' Blues"	65
2. Cover art for William Jerome and Jean Schwartz's "Chinatown, My Chinatown"	140
3. Cover art for William Jerome and Jean Schwartz's "In Blinky, Winky, Chinky Chinatown"	146
4. Cover art for W. A. Aeko and Arthur Denvir's "Forget Me Not"	182
5. Cover art for Arthur F. Holt and William T. Pierson's "My Honolulu Lulu"	188
6. Special chorus of "Aloha 'Oe" (Queen Lili'uokalani; J. Russel Robinson, arranger)	198
7. Cover art for Louis Weslyn, Eva Applefield, and Hal Dyson's "Honolulu Honey"	207

TABLES

1. The Spanish tinge in the music of Jelly Roll Morton	56
2. Form of "Gully Low Blues"	94
3. Selected recordings of "Chinatown, My Chinatown"	126

MUSICAL EXAMPLES

1. Charles Ives, "Ragtime Dance No. 2," piano, mm. 21–23	27
2. Charles Ives, "Ragtime Dance No. 2," piano	28
3. Edward Rimbault, "Happy Day"	29

4. Charles Ives, "Ragtime Dance No. 2," violin, mm. 5–6	29
5. Charles Ives, "Ragtime Dance No. 1," mm. 96–102	32
6. Charles Ives, "Ragtime Dance No. 4," mm. 100–108	34
7. a) tango / habanera; b) tresillo ; c) tango / habanera (tied) or tresillo in cut time	54
8. Jelly Roll Morton, "New Orleans Blues," mm. 6–17	60
9. Ferd Morton, "Jelly Roll Blues," mm. 45–56	67
10. Louis Armstrong's trumpet solo in "Gully Low Blues"	101
11. William Jerome and Jean Schwartz, "Chinatown, My Chinatown," mm. 31–62	134
12. "Chinatown, My Chinatown," mm. 1–4	135
13. "Chinatown, My Chinatown," mm. 39–42 and 51–54	136
14. Frank Davis and Win Brookhouse, "All Aboard for Chinatown," mm. 51–57	150
15. Sonny Cunha, "My Honolulu Tomboy," mm. 11–19	175
16. Sonny Cunha, "My Honolulu Hula Girl," mm. 21–23	176
17. Irving Berlin, "That Hula Hula," mm. 12–19	190
18. E. Ray Goetz, Joe Young, and Pete Wendling, "Yaaka Hula Hickey Dula," mm. 49–53	193

Acknowledgments

When I stepped into Mark Tucker's classroom for the first time, I had no idea that this book might someday be written. But his devotion to jazz history and American music was so inspiring that, seemingly before I knew it, I found myself embarking on my own musical journey. In those years as an undergraduate at Columbia University, I was fortunate to study with many similarly dedicated teachers, including Elaine Sisman, who taught me how to integrate historical sources into my writing; Timothy Taylor, whose example encouraged me to study the intersections of music and politics; and H. Wiley Hitchcock, who fostered my interest in the music of Charles Ives and offered valuable guidance and the best of friendship. Outside the classroom, I will always be thankful to Jeff Eldredge for being the first person to support my budding interest in this field and to Maria Ruvoldt for sharing memorable conversations and wise advice.

My work has profited from countless contributions by the faculty and students affiliated with the Department of Musicology at the University of California, Los Angeles. I benefited from stimulating graduate seminars and conversations that shaped my approach to music history, and I wish to acknowledge everyone who offered helpful advice about various aspects of this project, including Andrew Berish, Philip Brett, Maria Cizmic, Dale Chapman, Francesca Draughon, Amy Frishkey, Raymond Knapp, Elisabeth Le Guin, Erik Leidal, Tamara Levitz, Olivia Mather, Mitchell Morris, Louis Niebur, Stephanie Vander Wel, Jacqueline Warwick, Larry Wayte, and Nadya Zimmerman. I am especially grateful to Glenn Pillsbury for his altruism and his technical help, Kate Bartel for her remarkable kindness, Gordon Haramaki for his boundless warmth, David Ake for his friendship and his exemplary work, Daniel Goldmark for his cheerful outlook and ongoing advice, Loren Kajikawa for sharing new musical finds and memorable meals, and Cecilia Sun for being such a wonderful friend through it all.

Several of the chapters in this book took their initial shape in my dissertation, and I am grateful that the members of my committee, Albert Boime, Robert Fink, and Susan McClary, devoted so much of their time, energy, and expertise to the project. I am especially thankful to Robert Walser, my adviser, for all his efforts to foster my intellectual, professional, and personal growth. Chapter 3 would not have taken shape without his memorable graduate seminar on the music of Louis Armstrong; far more significantly, Rob's thoughtful advice and his concern for my well-being over the years have taught me what it takes to be a great mentor.

My research has been supported by fellowships from the Department of Musicology and the Graduate Division of the University of California, Los Angeles. Additionally, the American Musicological Society provided support for my graduate studies through the Alvin H. Johnson AMS 50 Dissertation Fellowship and the Howard Mayer Brown Fellowship. I also remain indebted to my longtime friend Seth Strumph for his financial assistance at a critical moment of my graduate career.

I could not have asked for a more supportive editor for this project than Mary Francis, whose careful guidance and patience have proven invaluable throughout the writing process. Along with Kalicia Pivrotto, Mary Severance, and other supportive colleagues at UC Press, she helped to enrich many different facets of this book. I am especially indebted to Ann Twombly for her fine editing work.

This project could not have been completed without the assistance of helpful staff at numerous archives. Peggy Alexander, Timothy Edwards, and their colleagues at the UCLA Library Performing Arts Special Collections have been especially generous, as much of my research derives from the sheet music collection held in their Archive of Popular American Music. Charles Reynolds, who heads the Music Library at the University of Michigan, has also gone above and beyond in support of this project. I would also like to thank Bruce Boyd Raeburn and the staff at Tulane University's William Ransom Hogan Archive of New Orleans Jazz for helping me to locate many useful materials related to Jelly Roll Morton.

I have benefited from commentary by audiences who heard earlier drafts of selected material at annual meetings of the Society for American Music, the American Musicological Society, and the International Association for the Study of Popular Music (U.S. branch). A previous version of chapter 4 was published in the Journal of the American Musicological Society, and

I am grateful to the journal's editors, Joseph Auner and Catherine Gjerdingen, for giving such thorough attention to my work. W. Anthony Sheppard, Judy Tsou, and Deborah Wong also offered particularly valuable feedback to the initial version of that article.

I wish to thank all the individuals who shared valuable resources or contributed advice as this book developed, including Judith Calvert, James Revell Carr, James Dapogny, Larry Edelstein, Keith Emmons, Daniel Goldmark, Larry Hamberlin, William Howland Kenney, Raymond Knapp, Robert Lang, Jeffrey Magee, Mike Meddings, Malcolm Rockwell, Deane Root, Judy Tsou, and Marshall Wolf. Conversations over the years with Richard Crawford have been particularly helpful in enabling me to better understand the field of American music. I am most grateful to Amy Ku'uleialoha Stillman for sharing her expertise in Hawaiian music as well as allowing me access to her collection of rare source materials, including various clippings, sound recordings, and early record catalogs. Without her encouragement and advice, my work on Hawaiian music in the United States could not have taken its present shape.

Special thanks go out to Gurminder Bhogal, Elayne Garrett, Roland Garrett, Daniel Goldmark, Brian Harker, William Howland Kenney, David Lasocki, Amy Stillman, Denise Von Glahn, and Travis Winfrey for their illuminating comments on drafts of various chapters and to Michael Pisani and Paul Machlin for their extremely helpful responses to the entire manuscript.

My colleagues at the University of Michigan have lent wholehearted support for my research and scholarship. I thank Dean Christopher Kendall for showing keen interest in my work, Steven Whiting for being such a superb mentor, Louise Stein for her pep talks and kindhearted advice, and Joseph Lam and James Borders for helping to guide my path as a junior faculty member. Stefano Mengozzi, Jason Geary, and Christi-Anne Castro all offered supportive words and camaraderie at just the right moments. And I have been particularly fortunate to share ideas and embark on various adventures involving American music with my friend and colleague Mark Clague, whose boundless energy and buoyant enthusiasm never fail to raise my spirits.

This project would not have been completed without the support and generosity of those dearest to me. It is hard to know how to express sufficient thanks to my brother and my parents, since they have always offered their unconditional support and love. I fear that my parents may end up remembering the many moments when I asked for a last-minute favor or some urgent proofreading advice, but I hope that they will also recognize how the journeys experienced by their families in America helped to shape this book, perhaps in more ways than I will ever know.

My heart and my deepest gratitude are given to Saleema Waraich for her kindness, understanding, love, and support as well as for bringing the warmth and encouragement of her loving family into my life.